

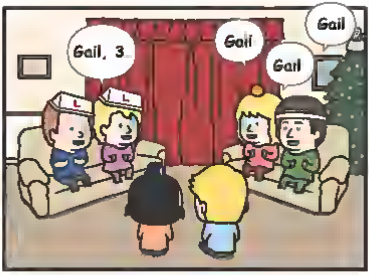
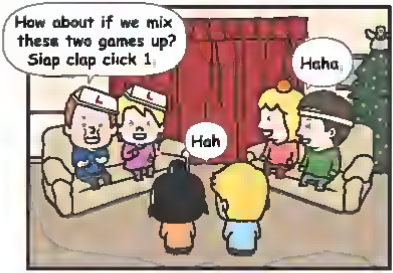
Mev hit his thighs so hard during the games .

The second game that I introduced was 'The frying pan' game

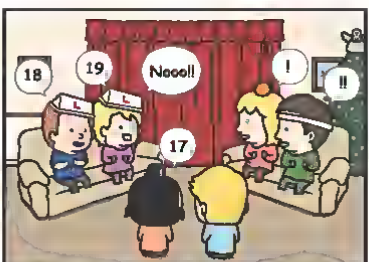
The rules are that you hit your thighs, clap your hands and then chck yaur fingers and say someone's name and a number



After we made sure everyone understood the rules, we played this game very joyfully as well.

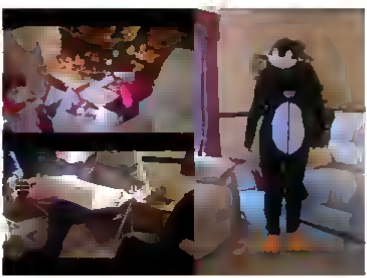


It was so fun that we played until the early hours of the morning

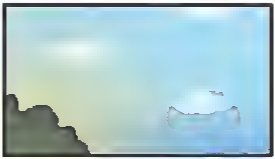


It looked like a simple and easy game but it was very exciting.

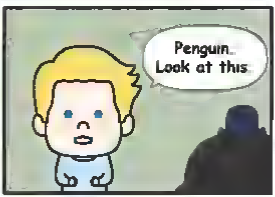
On Christmas day the twins joined us as well.
We ate lots of delicious food.

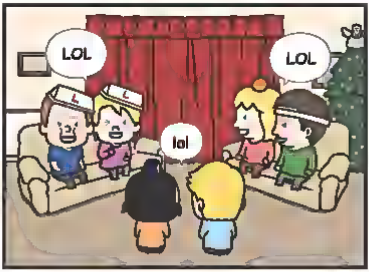


And we opened
our Christmas presents all together.



The next morning.

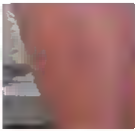




We're all enjoyed this game very much.

We played that game until our palms hurt then I taught them another game.

Korean Games



that he bruised
both of his thighs.

But
he wasn't the one person who had bruised thighs ...

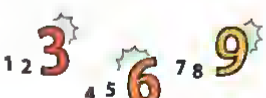
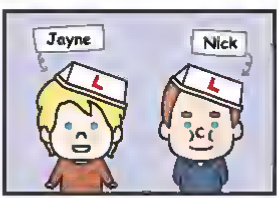
Like always, we had a really nice time with non-stop food, drink and chat.

But this Christmas,
I introduced the family to some games from Korea.



The first game
that I taught them was
'3,6,9'.

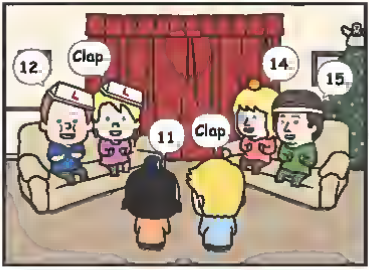
We went to Mev's dad's, Mark's, home for Christmas Eve and we went to Mev's mother's, Gail's, home in the night ready for Christmas.



Mev's auntie Jayne and uncle Nick were also at Gail's with us this Christmas

You have to clap whenever there is a number with 3, 6 or 9 in it.
If it is 13, you have to clap once and if it is 36, you have to clap twice.

Mev and I explained the rules.



And then we played the game.
